Atariah has a dream—a dream that she holds on to despite its improbability—the dream of freedom! But when you are trapped in a world that offers little more than hurt and pain and your own mind is ensnared with frustration and doubt where can you turn for such freedom? Do you wait for it to find you or do you set forth to take it for yourself? When Moses returns to Egypt with some seemingly outrageous claims, Atariah believes she is about to have that question answered. Pulled in many directions by the events that are unfolding about her and the feelings that are unfolding within, Atariah has to learn that perhaps the freedom that she so yearns for will come in a guise she never expected, requiring not action but choice.
